

Rules:

- ✓ No Talking
- ✓ No looking at your phone
- ✓ We listen to 'Winterspring/Summerfall'
- ✓ The wander lasts for the length of the album, an hour and twenty minutes
- ✓ At any given time, one person is 'leading' meaning we follow them
- ✓ When the leader feels they are finished, they stop and raise their hand, and someone else raises their hand to indicate they will become leader
- ✓ When the leader switches, flip a coin. If the coin is heads, the leader walks where they feel like walking, if its tails, they spin a pen or stick on the ground, and follow that direction for the duration of their lead

I don't really care that much about music titles - it often stresses me out to name my own music - but this month's wander is named after the music we'll listen to. It's from 'felbm'. I first heard his music at a record shop in Athens, and liked it casually - his earlier stuff is more in the vein of chill beats, and is his most popular, but I really prefer his more recent albums which are longer instrumental works with lots of themes coming in and out, returning, etc. very compository. Winterspring/Summerfall is his most recent album.

I picked it because I like the music, but then I was thinking more and more about the name - this recategorizing of seasons: what if we thought of the year as only 2 seasons, one warm one cold, and the flow between them as a natural fade instead of 4 distinct sections. Just winterspring and summerfall. The words almost sound like translations from a concept that doesn't exist in English. But interestingly its not "fallwinter/springsummer" - they're not cold/warm, they're 2 seasons each with their own arc of mildness into severity So it feels very appropriate for today's wander, which is just on the changing over, as I can feel summersfall slowly taking over - real warmth after a cold winterspring.
