

SoLO WANDER

SEP 30th 20 25

Jonah

Jonah

Jonah

Jonah

Jonah

Jonah

Jonah

Jonah

Jonah

Jonah

Jonah

Jonah

Jonab

Jonab

Jonab

Jonab

Jonab

Jonab

Jonab

Jonab

BREWED IN THE STREETS

MOBILE COFFEE SHOP

FIND US @ DEAN STREET PARK ON 6TH AVE

ALL DAY TUES THRU SUN

CALL / TEXT (646) 331-9052
LOCAL DELIVERY - MIN. ORDER $25
BREWEDINTHESTREETS.COM

Crazy show on the water

// SOLO WANDER

when I had the idea to do a wander each month, it was mostly to get myself back in the practice of wandering. When I was at my peak, I probably did once a month anyway, for fun. Then I moved, and I started doing them less. Before this project, I had very rarely wandered with other people, it was basically always a solo activity, and that was one of the things I liked about it.

The project has been about sharing wandering with people, which has been great. My only solo wander so far has been my smallest most last minute one ('release wander' - which i actually had a lot of fun doing) so I decided that this month I would do a sort of return to form for me, a solo wander, 2 hours instead of the 1 hour wanders I've been doing (I'd like to get back to doing even longer but 2 hours feels nice)

When I was only wandering alone, it was much more personal - I would often wander as a way to feel better if I was sad or lonely, or to feel a sense of adventure when I felt stuck in a city or stuck in a rut in my life. Wandering with other people feels more oriented towards fun and experimentation.

I'm also always leading to some extent (I'm the host, even if I'm not physically leading the walk) so there's a certain unavoidable sense of responsibility. Maybe it would feel different if I was wandering in a group of experienced peers. But it has felt incredible to introduce people to the idea of wandering - nearly everyone who has come is wandering for the first time. I get to show this part of my life that has felt incredibly intimate and special to other people, and get to see them enjoy it, and understand it, and feel how I feel when doing it and how I felt when I first started rules:

...

phone off

no music for the 1st hour, 2nd hour, listen to 'spoke of several'

take first bus

count stops and get off at a multiple of 4 document anything that seems in a state that's out of how it would normally/defaultly be

when you've documented 3 of these,

get on another bus, and get off at a multiple of 3

^ repeat

...

MECC

Finally saw a Toynbee tile in real life, so amazing, check out the wikipedia page