I feel like candy is a weirdly lifeblood/core experience of how I interact with a place. I always learn new candy when I travel. Less out of a worldliness and more out of desperation for candy

Big wafer sheet from corner store I wonder what it's used for?

RULES—————

- Phones only allowed for music
- No talking
- Follow the leader of the wander
- If the music ends before you finish the wander the wander is finished

- Listen to Velocity: Design: Comfort By Sweet Trip (it's all sparkly and candyish and like little sugar granules)
- Your shared budget is equal to the number of people you have times 2 (so for 2 ppl its $4, for 1 person its $2 etc.)
- Each time you pass an establishment that sells candy, go in and buy the cheapest candy there (1 piece per person) if they have nothing under $1 buy nothing
- Cycle leader each store, the leader also talks to store people if needed
- Wander is over when your money is gone

In Europe, lots of stuff is 'bueno' flavored meaning it's supposed to taste like the cream inside of a kinder bueno candy bar. This shit is nasty imo - they will put it in anything, hence the vanilla cream sandwich pictured above from a kiosk

Scary dutch cookie mascot

(IE a Scary mascot, not a mascot for a brand of cookies called “scary dutch cookies” although that would be great)

The haribo crocs jibbitz are real and you can also eat them if you get tired of the way they look
